CONCERNS OF THE DISTRICT

Pire Department Cannot Pully Protect the City from Conflagration.

A GREATER RESERVE NEEDED

Health Ordinances to Be Extended to Ten nallytown-Final Maps for the Extension of Highways-Care of Street Trees-Action of the Excise Board.

While the entire fire department was battling with a fire at the corner of Twelfth and Water streets Monday afternoon, in response to a general alarm, a second summons for help, prompted by the excitement at the new Raleigh Hotel building, was sent in, which could not be responded to, and then it was that this city was confronted with a startling situation.

It was shown that with the present facilities the department, excellent as it is, would be wholly powerless to cope with two destructive conflagrations occurring at the same time. The query was and is what should be done to meet the possible exigency.

Commissioner Ross said to a Times re-porter yesterday:
"The matter of maintaining adequate fire "The matter of maintaining adequate fire protection was never more forcibly brought to the attention of District people than it was yesterday. In cases of great emergency, such as could occur, it would be a serious problem. I shall consult with Chief Parris about it, and the board will doubtless urge upon Congress the great necessity for additional facilities. Why, this city should have a reserve force for protection of the government property alone. Under ordinary circumstances, the force can be divided, certainly, but should two great conflagrations break out in this city at points distant from each other, I realize that it would be impossible to ade-I realize that it would be impossible to ade

I realize that it would be impossible to adequately provide for both. We have a splendid fire service, and it has the confidence of Congress. I believe we may succeed in getting at least a small reserve force provided for. We shall make the effort."

Chief Parris was asked what he would be able to do with the force now at his command in case of two or more destructive fires occurring at the same time in sections remote from each other.

"Why, in that case, the fire that first started would get all the engines until such time as would get all the engines until such time as we could spare some of them."

GREATER RESERVE FORCE NEEDED, "Is there not a necessity, in view of such a possibility, for a greater reserve force?" he possibility, for a greater reserve force?" he was asked.

"Undoubtedly," was his emphatic rejoinder. "That is what I have been striving for years, through the proper channels, to have Congress understand. If two or more big fires should break out we should be practically helpless as to all but one. With fifteen engines in service we should be able to meet any emergency. I think it would afford us a very fair reserve force. I hope Congress will see the importance of giving us that many."

Commissioner Powell said it was a matter that did not come properly within his jurisdiction, though as a member of the board he was of course in favor of insuring the public safety.

Concerning the claim of the Center Market Company for reimbursement for the expense of constructing the iron bridge extending from the intersection of Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues to the market house, the Louisians avenues to the market house, the attorney for the District, in an opinion filed with the Commissioners, says:

"It seems to me that the cialm of the market company that it should be reimbursed the expense of creeting this bridge ami for damages for being deprived of it is inadmissibile. In 1878, when the market company released to the District that portion of the reservation within the iron railings upon which the creetion of a municipal building was contemplated, there was no reservation of any right on the part of the market company to erect the bridge in question.

"The erection of the bridge, it seems to me, was temporary, and that it must have been the understanding and agreement of the parties at the time, that should the District require the space at any time for municipal controls the market company would remove purposes, the market company would remove the bridge without claim for compensation or
